

Annex

The questionnaire used in the research

In a crisis situation, it may be necessary to reassess decision-making criteria. In your opinion, which is the best representative approach in the case of <CRISIS1>?

1. Katalin pointed out that in an economic crisis, the interests of the voters are particularly important. In a crisis situation, the interests of the people come first.
2. Katalin pointed out that in an economic crisis, expert advice is particularly important. In a crisis situation, expertise is the priority.
3. Katalin pointed out that in an economic crisis, common good is particularly important. In a crisis situation, the common good takes precedence.
4. Katalin pointed out that in an economic crisis, a unified party program is particularly important. In a crisis situation, party discipline takes precedence.
5. Katalin pointed out that in a social crisis, the interests of the voters are particularly important. In a crisis situation, the interests of the people come first.
6. Katalin pointed out that in a social crisis, expert advice is particularly important. In a crisis situation, expertise is the priority.
7. Katalin pointed out that in a social crisis, common good is particularly important. In a crisis situation, the common good takes precedence.
8. Katalin pointed out that in a social crisis, a unified party program is particularly important. In a crisis situation, party discipline takes precedence.
9. Katalin pointed out that in an environmental crisis, the interests of the voters are particularly important. In a crisis situation, the interests of the people come first.
10. Katalin pointed out that in an environmental crisis, expert advice is particularly important. In a crisis situation, expertise is the priority.
11. Katalin pointed out that in an environmental crisis, common good is particularly important. In a crisis situation, the common good takes precedence.
12. Katalin pointed out that in an environmental crisis, a unified party program is particularly important. In a crisis situation, party discipline takes precedence.
13. Kálmán pointed out that in an economic crisis, the interests of the voters are particularly important. In a crisis situation, the interests of the people come first.
14. Kálmán pointed out that in an economic crisis, expert advice is particularly important. In a crisis situation, expertise is the priority.

15. Kálmán pointed out that in an economic crisis, common good is particularly important. In a crisis situation, the common good takes precedence.
16. Kálmán pointed out that in an economic crisis, a unified party program is particularly important. In a crisis situation, party discipline takes precedence.
17. Kálmán pointed out that in a social crisis, the interests of the voters are particularly important. In a crisis situation, the interests of the people come first.
18. Kálmán pointed out that in a social crisis, expert advice is particularly important. In a crisis situation, expertise is the priority.
19. Kálmán pointed out that in a social crisis, common good is particularly important. In a crisis situation, the common good takes precedence.
20. Kálmán pointed out that in a social crisis, a unified party program is particularly important. In a crisis situation, party discipline takes precedence.
21. Kálmán pointed out that in an environmental crisis, the interests of the voters are particularly important. In a crisis situation, the interests of the people come first.
22. Kálmán pointed out that in an environmental crisis, expert advice is particularly important. In a crisis situation, expertise is the priority.
23. Kálmán pointed out that in an environmental crisis, common good is particularly important. In a crisis situation, the common good takes precedence.
24. Kálmán pointed out that in an environmental crisis, a unified party program is particularly important. In a crisis situation, party discipline takes precedence.